As a special needs student with autism, I never thought I would have the opportunity to go to college. However, there are college programs for individuals like me to learn and grow. In 2023, I was accepted to the University of California Los Angeles (UCLA) Extension Pathway program on the UCLA campus. The Pathway program allows neurodiverse individuals like me to receive a blend of educational, social, and vocational experiences at a major university. I have been in the Pathway program for one year and now as a recipient VAW/VRC Merit scholarship it will allow me to continue my participation in the Pathway program at the UCLA Extension. I hope to be an example to other military children with special needs and believe the Pathway experience will teach me job and independent living skills. Upon completion of the Pathway program, I hope to work as an instructional aide for other special needs children and live independently near my parents.
